The Shophouse artwork is reflective of Singapore culture and heritage. Shophouse buildings can be found all over the island. These stately buildings are a wonderful expression of the blending of a work and living space. Shophouse ornamentation draws inspiration from Malay, Chinese, European and Peranakan traditions. Painting the facade in pastel colours became popular in the mid-20th century, and these colours have remained strongly associated with the image of the Singaporean Shophouse.

The Peranakans, also known as the Straits Chinese, are a community of acculturated Chinese unique to Southeast Asia. Influenced by both the local Malay and Colonial British culture, the Peranakans developed their own rich culture and heritage.
